From the Editor

The Ethiopian year is winding down; we only have a quarter of the year left to complete everything we said we would for the year. Maybe it's time to put that event concept you have into action. It's time to start that new habit you've been wanting to cultivate. As the Ethiopian rainy season approaches, we are witnessing the last of the city's sunny-season outdoor activities; take advantage of them while they last.

Atmosphere Kicks off to a Warm, Soft Opening

Atmosphere, Linkup Addis's newest open multipurpose venue, had its soft opening on Thursday, May 19, 2022. The venue, which has eight major sections including The Slope, a street-side mini-event venue, an outdoor bar, a shopping floor and an art gallery, received a warm welcome from the creative community in attendance. Atmosphere is expected to transform the event and creative sectors in Addis Ababa with several cultural and entertainment activities spread over the coming months.

A Month of Awards in Addis

It was a month of awards in Addis, with two major annual awards happening during the month. Guma Awards took place at Ethiopian Skylight Hotel on Thursday, 19 2022, with the who's-who of the Ethiopian creative sector in attendance. Another major award, Leza, also happened in May at Hilton Hotel.

Addis Buzzed with Events of Scale

May saw an incredible lineup of large-scale events attended by thousands of people. Diamond Platnumz performed at Gofere Afrobeat Fest, at Ghion Hotel, and Zoya at Greek Club on the same night as Zelan Festival (which took place on April 30th, 2022). The following week, Dawit Tsigie performed live for the first time in nearly five years in front of thousands of people at Mechare Meda. The month also had Sami Dan's Sabet concert at Hotel De Leopold and Ephrem Tamiru's Abren Concert at Ghion.

Mado Hotel Greens Restaurant

Ephrata Kibru

On the way to Atlas from Bole Medhaniam sits Mado Hotel, and on its first floor lies "Greens Restaurant," a proudly organic establishment that is the subject of this month's review. A foot inside the premises reveals a classy interior. There is nothing over the top—the design is chic, impeccable, and accommodates an ornate finishing touch. Once settled into my seat, I found the ambiance even more inviting, and I would later find myself hard-pressed to leave.

Although ripe with different meal options, "greens" had two popular combinations—the "Greens Combination" and "Ye Beteseb Gebeta". Seeing as we were only a table of three, we went ahead with the first option because the second accommodated between 10 and 12 diners.

Before our main dish came out, some chicken noodle soup made its way to our table. It was a thin soup that featured some superb spinach and leek. The chicken itself was very soft and savory from the stock it was in. The garlic bread that came with the soup was perfectly complementary. All in all, it was a great start.

Soon after we finished our starters, the colorful 'Greens Combination', a meal consisting of chicken, beef, Nile perch, and various other vegetable dishes, lay before us. It sat at 90 cm long and was a sight to behold. I loaded a portion of each

The salad was the first to make its way down my gut and it would also be the last, for that first bite convinced me that it was worth savoring until the very end.

meal onto my plate and proceeded to dig in. The salad was the first to make its way down my gut, and it would also be the last, for that first bite convinced me that it was worth savoring until the very end. The salad itself was, of course, made from the freshest of lettuce and the juiciest of tomatoes, but what ultimately made them shine was the dressing they came in. Said dressing was a thick paste which, in addition to avocado, included mango, which added sweetness I didn't know I wanted.

I next tried some of the grilled chicken and beef fillet alongside some broccoli. The chicken was well cooked yet maintained a soft texture, successfully avoiding the rubbery-ness that could easily come from overcooking. Although the chicken was flavorful, it couldn't compete with the beef fillet, which was juicy on another level. The tenderness of the cut was highlighted by how the meat was prepared. It was a delight. The broccoli was a simple side dish—it was boiled and seasoned adequately, complementing both meat dishes very well.

Once done tasting the chicken and beef, I tried the two different types of Nile Perch dishes presented before me. Both were grilled, but one was prepared with salsa and the other was seasoned more lightly. The first was very soft and malleable, with a pleasant lemony tang and a slight spicy undercurrent. Its inviting reddish hue was highlighted even more by the dried red peppers that adorned the meal. The second, on the other hand, was predictably much more plain. Although the superb grilling the Nile Perch received was still evident, the meal did benefit from my mixing some of the salad dressing into my bites. The eggplants I chose to enjoy with the fish were also well prepared, which surprised me as I don't really like eggplants outside of moussakas.

After clearing the Nile perch, I helped myself to some beef patties and roasted potatoes. The patties were, like every other meat present, soft. But unlike the others, this one incorporated ginger—a choice that added an interesting spiciness to the taste. The roasted potatoes I enjoyed with the patties were also a delight. Roasted potatoes are almost always going to be inoffensive as it would be quite difficult to go wrong with them, but I could still say the ones I had fell on the better side of the spectrum. They were quite pleasant.

After helping myself to a plateful of the 'Greens Combination,' I washed it all down with some mango juice. It was bright and yellowish in appearance, but the addition of some flakes of apple skin in the juice gave it some delicious looking spots of red. As for the taste, it was quite fresh and sweet—although not so sweet that it would be considered saccharine. It was, all in all, a delight.

And just like that, my stay at Greens Restaurant was over. However, I had already planned on coming back, this time with a group of my friends instead. I was thinking of either repeating the 'Greens Combination' or trying the 'Ye Beteseb Gebeta'. Either way, my satisfaction is guaranteed. And if you choose to heed my recommendation, yours will be as well. Space for the pizzeria, but customers can sit wherever they please within the hotel to enjoy their pizza. Here's how my tasting adventure went.

Do you consider yourself a content creator, a comedian or an entertainer?

I have always wanted to become an established standup comedian, which I am still working on. I have always wanted to build a one-hour or so long material for a stand up. But, as they say, you have to first live to talk about things. When ideas come to my mind that crack up both myself and people around me, I put it out there for people to consume, but in a situation where I have not yet produced a one or two hour long material, I would rather refer to myself as a content creator. I am working to officially become a comedian.

Why did you pick the name Tomas?

You know, 80% of my life I lived in Hawassa, where there are a lot of interesting people with funny characters. When it started it was just with my friends where we would have an imaginary person where we would impersonate him in different scenarios. And looking for an easy, relatable name, we ended up picking Tomas. Whenever we were having some good time we started going like 'it's Tomas time', and it somehow grew in me as a character. The name has become such a household name that even my dad calls me Tomas these days.

Do you sometimes think about changing your name for good?

Yeah, who knows. I would turn around more for Tomas than Eyosiyas, so who knows...

If you had to look, which part of your work do you think made the biggest impact and shift in your career?

I think there have been three major parts in my career. The first phase was the audio time during the bluetooth era. It was when people used to share audios via bluetooth, and my first hit in comedy was when I heard my voice in random people's phones, and I couldn't tell them it was me. That was a big step for me because it told me that people might enjoy my content.

The second one is the filter faces where I used to make filter faces with different characters (which added a great spice to my content) The face filter brought characters that people really connected to. The third was the Sitigeref track. There is a cultural trend that people say 'yihenin sitigeref tawerawaleh' and that really showed me that you can make impactful social commentaries without being too serious.

Given that your fame has grown rapidly, how do you deal with the popularity?

It spices up my life. You know everyone has some crazy/fun element and when they see me, that personality usually surfaces. In a place like Ethiopia, where people are not comfortable showing their emotions, it is a blessing to have people express their emotions around me. Even at concerts and performances where I am a bit tired, it gives me energy to see people's love for what I do. I also sometimes see people sending me comments and messages where they sound like they are hating on what I do and my character, and all it takes is sending them a DM with a good sense of humor, and they wouldn't be haters anymore. It shows you that negative comments are not entirely negatively charged inside-out. And as they say, if everyone loves what you do, it means there is something wrong with you.

You have apparently created a great impact among your audience, what is the end game for you? What is the big picture?

I am now working on NFTs and I am also coming up with a YouTube content that will engage people at an even better level. The other project I have is the stand-up comedy material which needs a bit of time. Our local audience is one that is hard to entertain easily so I am working hard on my material. I am working hard on NFTs, and I am the first artist to sell NFTs.

When you started out, you were relatively unknown and had more freedom as to how you acted and said things. With your growing fame, how has your responsibility changed?

When I started with the audios and videos, it was the way I acted with my friends. However, as my content grew popular, my responsibility has definitely changed. That responsibility is not only about my original content, but also contents other people create. I have had a few troubles in the past because people produce memes with my face in them, and some people think I actually said that.

On the other hand, people loved my content because of its freedom, and though I can't have as much freedom as I used to have, I try to make it open and free as I can.

Do you consider yourself a person who has shaped the Ethiopian online influencer market?

I think I did influence the market. I see content creators and comedians putting content online and I can see that I have given them some motivation.

What frustrates you as a popular figure?

One of the frustrating as a content creator is when you produce a same (or almost the same) quality content as you put in the past but people just don't get it. The other frustration is when people use my face for inappropriate content like racial content especially in memes. Once I made a music about election and it was turned to look like it was too much politics where it seemed like I was trying to put some message about some people in prison. That frustrated me little bit.

You are now based in Finland; are you gone for good?

A few weeks ago, we launched I first came for vacation, but I wanted some concentration time and wanted to fix some logistical issues like credit cards so I can properly monetize my content. I have not been monetizing on the internet because my biggest focus was getting my content out there. The face filter brought characters that people really connected to. My content has mostly been available on Instagram. I also want to explore other ways of monetization. Working on all these, I might stay here for a year or two.

Aren't you afraid of losing relevance by staying too far for too long?

I think creators who travel abroad to usual not to engage with their audience. As a creator, what I never want is to come back home where everyone has moved on and my content does not have relevance anymore. I am working hard on that.

How old are you now?

I turned 30 a couple of months ago.

We know you are good friends with

ROPHNAN, do you plan to produce some collaborative works together?

ROPHNAN is like a friend. He is a person who tells me right there when my content is not funny. We have a music video coming out around end of June, and I think that will be the next big thing.

Are you planning any shows any time soon?

There is this Habesha Restaurant in Helsinki and I am thinking to do a stand-up comedy show there. I will keep doing my work on social media.

Shopping in the Clouds

Atula Abadi

Remember the days when people took salt, pelts and animal teeth to flea markets? Surprisingly, the purpose of those teeth, pelts, and salt is not a sale or a purchase, but rather an exchange. A system of barter that kept us going until the first ego-maniac king or queen decided to stamp their faces on coins and spread them across their land. Like a dog pissing on a tree and declaring it his “property” for literally no reason other than.... DOG. Of course, in 2022, you COULD go to the market with some salt, exotic animal skins, and teeth, but you will be arrested and then beaten, faster than you can say “God less the Queen.” No, no, we don’t even use paper money these days. It’s all done online, you see. E-Commerce. And with the futile hope of saving us all from a vicious beating at the local flea market, here are the top five e-commerce sites in Africa.

Konga, Nigeria

Konga, a Nigerian eCommerce platform founded in 2012, offers a third-party online marketplace. They deliver products to customers all over Nigeria and close neighbors, and their stipulated delivery time is: Lagos 2-5 days, Rivers 3-7 days, Abuja 3-8 days, and other states 4-9 days. Their categories are varied enough for pretty much any customer, and they even feature a first-party direct store spanning various categories, including consumer electronics, fashion, home appliances, books, children’s items, and personal care products. Are you in or around Nigeria? Give them a shout.

Jumia, Multiple Nations

Currently operating in over 10 African countries, including Egypt, Tunisia, Uganda, Kenya, Nigeria, and more, Jumia is one of the largest e-commerce companies in Africa. Jumia is one of the biggest e-commerce companies in Africa, with around 31.8 million visits per month. It is also the largest market in Nigeria, which provides 26% of its monthly traffic. Products sold there may include décor items, groceries, clothes, electronics, books, and health and beauty products. It is so influential, in fact, that Jumia’s wide reach in Africa has made it known as “the Amazon of Africa.”

Kilimall, Kenya

An African eCommerce company currently operating in Kenya, Uganda, and Nigeria. Kilimall was founded in Kenya in 2014. Kilimall operates two main eCommerce operations, namely online shopping, where local companies sell their products on the platform with global shipping, and product sourcing, where Kilimall sources products that are not available locally and delivers them to its customers. Kilimall also offers its merchants free warehousing in Nairobi, from where sold goods are transported by a fleet of motorcycles and vehicles. With a reach of over 500 shop owners and merchants, Kilimall is a rapidly rising name in the e-commerce game.

Afrikrea, Global

An online marketplace dealing in African fashion, arts, and crafts, Afrikrea has a range of products that include fine art, fabrics, jewelry, bags, etc. It serves clients in over 100 countries globally and has over 5000 shops. Afrikrea has been praised time and time again for their fast delivery, good quality items, reasonable prices, and excellent customer service. However, like any large shopping venture, there are a few negative reviews regarding orders gone wrong and the seller’s inability to send return shipping labels. Regardless, Afrikrea’s online store has over 250,000 visitors every month and is highly recommended.

Takealot, South Africa

Takealot is an online retailer mostly focused on electronics. It is a place for shoppers who seek a convenient and simplified online shopping experience. The site has been around for over a decade, and its extensive catalogue and wide range of entertainment products give it a distinct advantage. Customers can look at and perhaps even purchase anything from books to games, computers and TVs. Following a 100 million dollar investment from Tiger Global in 2014, in April of 2017, Takealot scored a significant investment of over US $69 million from Naspers, one of Africa’s biggest digital companies. Takealot is going for gold, and we will surely be hearing about them more and more.

The New Cultural and Creative Hub in Addis

Amanu Teriessa

In an ever-swelling city like Addis, where millions of young people migrate from all corners, there is an ever-increasing fusion and merger of cultures and creativity, and the need for spaces that comfortably accommodate cultural and artistic expressions is often poorly satisfied. The few venues in the city that qualify for all these traits are either too small or not diversified enough to accommodate a wide range of artistic, creative, and cultural expressions and events. It is against this background of Addis's cultural scene that Atmosphere has launched.

When I first received an invitation to attend the soft launch of this new multipurpose space around Atlas Hotel on Ghana Street, I wasn't sure what to expect, and I set my expectations as low as I could, thinking I might be in for some level of disappointment given how hyped up places usually get, especially when they open. And I was definitely not very ready for what awaited.

As I approached the venue, which is located just a few meters along the road to St. Urael church from Atlas Hotel, warm string lights and a colorful drive way up a sloppy asphalt gate told me I was there. The main gate of the compound leads into the parking (Park-King), an outdoor space with a tiki bar, and Wanderlust, a mobile restaurant that serves burgers and sandwiches—extremely tasty burgers and sandwiches. I was greeted by several familiar faces in the Ethiopian creative sector engaged in warm conversations, sipping cocktails and beer, and taking bites from Wanderlust's menu. The soft, yet extremely warm, Amapiantune playing in the background gave the entire place a soft, yet extremely warm vibe. The furnishing lends the place a down-to-earth, inviting feel.

Having met a few old friends and catching up after some time apart, I walked into the main building, which sits to the right of Park-King. The building is divided into five separate units, and the building greets people with a lot of warmth emanating from it. The brown wooden floor, the pallet-turned-sofa furniture, and a 90-degree street view match perfectly with the wooden bar, creating a cozy working atmosphere. The room serves as a bar and restaurant, making it convenient for work, social meet-ups, and/or a great evening chill.

Up on the first floor sits the artisan shopping area. Divided into six open shops, separated merely by color codes, the shopping area mainly features artisanal and handmade items in a month-or-two-long standing bazaar. To the left of the shopping area is the humus bar, which has yet to open its doors to visitors. The second floor of the building boasts a beautifully set gallery and an indoor event venue alongside a recording studio.

The young, energetic lady who was facilitating my visit to Atmosphere explained that the venue is currently designing multiple events and content to take place at the venue throughout the month, and she also underlined that the venue is open for event organizers and performers to host their events. From the cozy outdoor event space to the cozy indoor bar and the gallery, I have found Atmosphere to be exactly what Addis needs to help build its cultural and creative industries. And I can't wait to see what will happen at this wonderful place. Memorable experience, and I would implore anyone to go visit and have a green afternoon.

Folks Who Sang

Alula Abadi

A form of contemporary music, folk is a genre that is western both in sound and content. Every story had a feel of rhythmic story telling of the ups and downs of working class folk. Commonly, the topics involve the plight of the common people. And topics like depression, oppression, and war were often discussed. In fact, regardless of instrumentation and musicality, as folk music grew and progressed, it became more of a vessel of storytelling than anything else. And while trials and tribulations are mostly the way of the folk, early and traditional folk music are commonly associated with folklore. The tales of stars selling their souls and of a devil stalking the woods of Jersey (the Jersey devil) were delivered beautifully through the superstitious words and twanging cords of this genre.

Be that as it may, there is a strong patriotic component to the music, as it is largely associated with the national culture rather than the artistic elite. Many string instruments, like the acoustic guitars, banjo, fiddle, and accordion, have been used with a storytelling voice, and some performers even went for authentic and exotic lap string instruments like the dulcimer and the zither.

Specifically, the acoustic guitar and zither were favorites among the earliest folk musicians, including Woody Guthrie, Jimmie Rogers, and Pete Seeger. This was big, of course, since Woody Guthrie in the 1930s is often seen as the first significant contributor to the genre. His earliest works focused on the plight of the working class in the Dust Bowl Midwest (Dust Bowl farmers). And owing to the nationalist tendencies of folk music, Woody and his music were largely associated with socialism, communism, and just generally left-wing political tendencies.

The 30s started with a bang for folk music, but it was the 60s and 70s that saw most of its development and recognition among a new group of the masses. And sure enough, traditional American folk music started to blend with mainstream recorded pop music, and the music of the folk revival became empathetic narrative pop music. Since then, community-aspired genres like hip-hop and punk have evolved from this combination of folk and pop.

Folk is one of the most rapidly evolving genres in music. In fact, it is so quick and impactful that any artist that is seen phasing through multiple styles with a story and a string instrument is referred to as folky. But perhaps the strangest aspect of this genre is how it managed to start in the 30s and went on to be infused into every form of music involved in storytelling. No one turns down a good story. Stories are common. They are like rivers or sun shine, a common ground. And human beings have sat around fires telling stories for literally centuries, and it is this common ground which I think has kept the folk alive and singing.

Thanks to technology, traveling has never been easier, both in the literal and non-literal sense. These days, we can travel with our imagination from one part of the globe to another with the help of tools like webcams, streaming services, and even our phones. Books have always been great travel companions too. There is nothing better than reading a good book to pass the time and keep your brain occupied during a long trip.

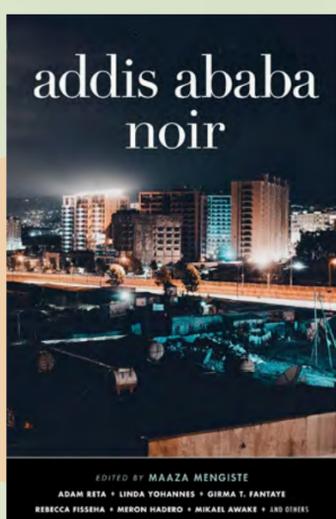

So here is a list of books to read to travel around the world while relaxing comfortably on your sofa. I hope the list of four books will help you daydream about your next trip and ignite the wanderlust in all of us!

1. Addis Ababa Noir by Meaza Mengistu | Addis Abeba

Perhaps because I was born in Addis, perhaps because I spent my formative years in Addis, perhaps because I made my lifelong friendships here, Addis holds a special place in my heart. I have traveled widely and fallen in love with so many cities, and yet not one city pulls at my heartstrings the way Addis does. It is only fitting that my first book recommendation is set in this magical city that I now get to call home again after two decades away. I adore this bustling and ever-changing city, despite its crazy traffic, unreliable power, scarcity of water, pollution, and high population density.

"Addis Noir" is a wonderful introduction to this sprawling city of millions of plus-inhabitants and a real melting pot of cultures. The book is divided into four sections: Past Hauntings; Translations of Grief; Madness Descends; and Police and Thieves. While I enjoyed all of the stories, some in particular stayed with me long after I finished the book. I truly enjoyed "A Double Edged Inheritance" by Hannah Giorgis and "Ostrich" by Rebecca Fisseha. Like myself, these are stories of women who lived abroad and who returned to Ethiopia with questions whose answers are entangled with their own histories and those of the countries they left and came back to. Despite the varied and distinct voices in these pages, no single book can contain all of the wonderful, intriguing, vexing complexities of Addis Ababa. What you will read are stories by some of Ethiopia's most talented writers living in the country and abroad.

Musical Pairing: "Addis Ababa Bete" by the late Alemayehu Eshete is a great accompaniment for this collection of stories, as much like the book, the song is a love letter to Addis Ababa!

2. The Shadow of the Wind by Carlos Ruiz Zafón | Barcelona

When I visited in 2017, the city of Barcelona embraced me with open arms. I loved its positive and open vibe, beautiful mountains and nature, the people, and most importantly, the amazing food. For good reason, artists like Picasso and Gaud are likely to come to mind when thinking of Barcelona, and for good reason. Gaud's distinct architectural style is woven into the city of Barcelona and is so much fun to explore at your own pace. Inspired by nature, his often-colorful work twists and turns throughout the city, making it a living museum on its own.

This novel combines mystery, a love for books, and secrets of the city of Barcelona, among its beautiful modernist buildings and dilapidated post-war streets. The owner of a second-hand bookshop leads his 11-year-old son to an elegant but decadent Catalan capital in search of the "Cemetery of Forgotten Books," then finds himself with one different from the others—a "cursed" book that governs and changes the course of the narrated facts.

Musical Pairing: Much like the book, the song "Barcelona" by Ed Sheeran is an ode to the great city's vibrant history and culture.

3. The Lotus Eater by Tatjana Soli | Ho Chi Minh

"The Lotus Eater" is set in Ho Chi Minh City, AKA Saigon. A beautiful love story that starts with the fall of Saigon. Two lovers make their way through the streets, desperately trying to catch one of the last planes out. Helen Adams, a photojournalist, must leave behind a war she has become addicted to and a devastated country she has come to love. Linh, her lover, must grapple with his own conflicting loyalties to the woman he loves and his country.

Betrayal and self-sacrifice follow, echoing the pattern of their relationship over the war-torn years, and with jaded, cynical, larger-than-life war correspondent Sam Darrow, spurred on by the need to get the truth about the war out to an international audience and the immense personal cost this carries, Sam and Helen's passionate and all-consuming love is tested to the limit.

Ho Chi Minh City is Vietnam at its most dizzying: a high-octane city of commerce and culture that has driven the country forward with its pulsating energy. It is a chaotic whirl, and visitors cannot help but be hauled along for the ride. I visited this lovely city when I was in grad school and would definitely recommend it for all that it has to offer. I traveled solo and felt super safe and free the whole week I was there.

Musical Pairing: Jazz nights are a big part of Ho Chi Minh city's nightlife and what better song to go with this book than a song by the Jazz legend herself Billie Holiday. "Blue Moon" is a Billie Holiday classic that I can listen to over and over.

4. Piecing Me Together by Renee Watson | Portland, OR

Portland is a city I called home for two decades of my life. I can sum up my feelings for Portland as "a thin line between like and dislike". There is so much to like and so much to dislike about this city. The best part of this city, perhaps, is the people that reside in it. I have met some of the most incredible, amazing, and kindred souls in Portland. Set in Portland, "Piecing Me Together" is such a moving book by Renee Watson.

Renee Watson's new young-adult novel's protagonist, Jade, makes art collages to process her experiences at home in Northeast Portland, as a black student on scholarship at a mostly white private high school, in a mentorship program she reluctantly joined, and in a new friendship with a white girl, and she does so without the standard love interest and focused on her own future. In Jade, the reader can see their authentic self and that they do not have to conform to societal norms. We all don't have to come from a traditional family to find success. We don't have to act and look a certain way. We can piece together our lives and be someone we can be proud of.

Fun Fact: Renee Watson and I attended Jefferson High School in Portland.

Musical Pairing: Lizzo's "Good as Hell" is such a powerful song and should be an anthem for all those who are struggling with self love and self acceptance.

Addis Arts Karta

In partnership with Link Up Addis, the “Addis Arts Karta” brings together user-friendly information about the exciting network of galleries and craft stores based in the city of Addis Ababa.

The 25 locations listed here can be easily found on googlemaps and have regular opening hours. First launched in 2019, the “Addis Arts Karta” is an ongoing initiative which aims to contribute to the growing cultural economy of Addis Ababa, facilitating information for visitors and fostering connections between art lovers and artists.

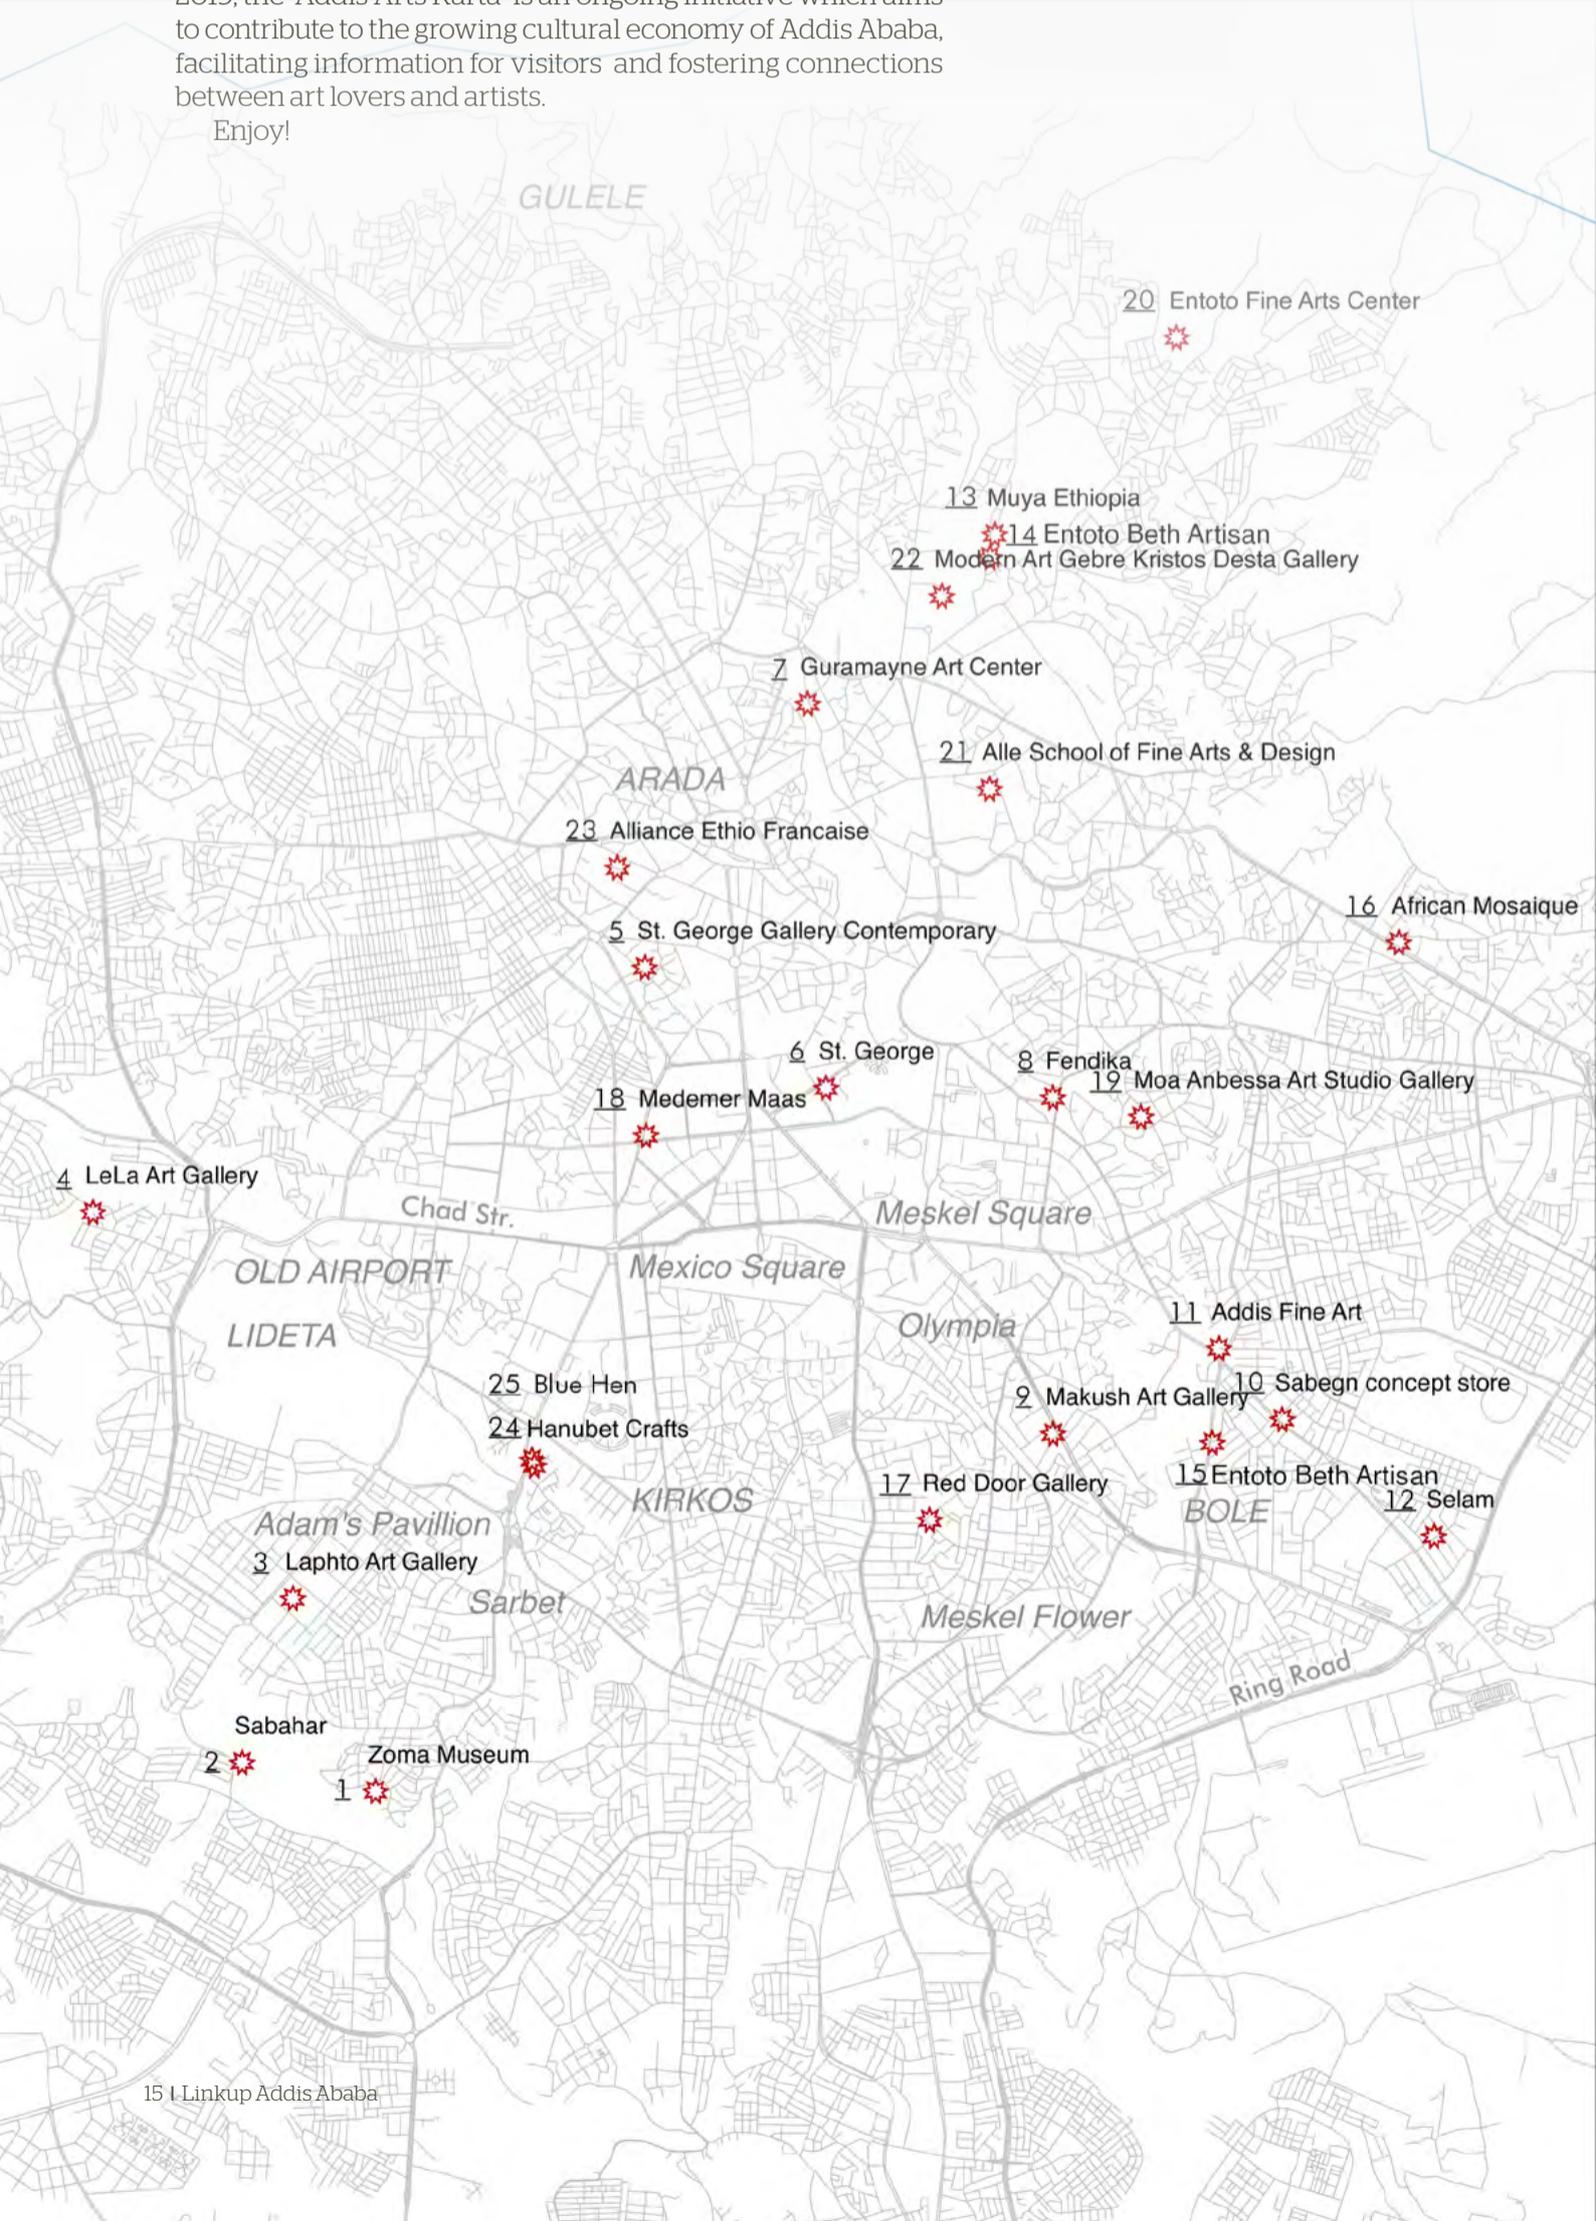

Enjoy!
